

DO YOU KNOW FOR KIDS...water weighs less when frozen?

At the freezing point, water molecules stop contracting and move apart. The molecules form a structure that has air gaps, making the ice less dense than water. This is why ice floats in your water glass and why lakes and rivers freeze from the top to the bottom, allowing fish to survive even when the surface of the lake or river is frozen.