About Warrington Township

Warrington Township is located in central Bucks County, approximately 20 miles north of central Philadelphia. The Township encompasses 13.5 square miles, being bordered on the north by New Britain, Warwick, and Doylestown Townships, on the east by Warminster Township, and on the south and west by Montgomery and Horsham Townships. The Township is comprised of the unincorporated villages of Eureka, Neshaminy, Tradesville, and Warrington.

Until the late 1950's, the Township was primarily rural in character, at which time a transition in land use from rural-agricultural to suburban and single-family residential began. Because of this change, the development of the Township became regulated by the Zoning Code and sub-division regulations in 1981, allowing multi-family house units within the Township.

The Township has evolved into a commuter-oriented community, based on employment opportunities in the metropolitan Philadelphia labor market. The Pennsylvania Turnpike is approximately six miles south, and Routes 611 and 309 provide North to South transit to the metropolitan centers of Philadelphia and Trenton. Passenger transportation is provided by SEPTA as well to accommodate the volume of commuters from our Township.
